CORA helps someone escaping abuse every 45 minutes.
Intimate partner abuse does not happen "somewhere else." It lives in our communities. People like you speaking out and stepping up is the only way to address and change it.

“It happens pretty often. I’ll be meeting new people and they’ll inevitably ask, “what do you do?” I’m always proud to say I work at CORA. But, more importantly, after talking about the work I do, one person - maybe more - will take me aside and tell me that they had or are currently in an abusive relationship.

This always makes me think two things. First is that this is an issue that really does touch all of us. We all know someone - know them well - who has experienced abuse. And second, how utterly and absolutely important the work is that CORA does.”

“CORA has given me support, courage and helped me deal with the false sense of guilt I was feeling. The strength I got from the one-on-one counseling was incredible, and the feeling of peace I got from group was even better. Thank you, CORA, for providing these services and I think it would be a great loss if the services were cut back or completely dissolved.”
